Applicant's representative argues that Anderson, Matsura and Bravman do not teach a system for distributing program content having a means for transmitting the program content and data relating via a wireless network and for storing the data in response to a user input.. However, Anderson discloses a remote device that transmits information to the home station or Personal Communication Services Network Control Center which receives the required information and directs it to the request data servers. The request data servers store the requested information in their databases, and reply back to the PCS NCC with valid product information and a request for order delivery and purchase confirmation (see col. 3, line 45- col. 4, line 52; col. 2, lines 36-48).

Applicant's representative argues that Matsura does not teach a storage of data relating to program content; 2) provide for a storage of this signal in response to user input; 3) provide a nonrecord-ability signal

Matsuura discloses an Internet Web site address data which is stored in the Internet address memory, where the address data is stored corresponding to program and page information indicating character broadcast program and page positions on which object Web site address data is superposed. The character broadcast program information can be obtained by the user based on program information and page information included in the header of the character broadcast transmitted with the character data (col. 4, lines 33-64; col. 5, line 39- col. 6, line 64) In response to applicant's argument that the references fail to teach all the features of applicant's invention, it is noted that the features upon which applicant relies are taught by Anderson, Matsuura and Bravman. The claims are interpreted in light of the specification, and the references are read into the claims.
